National Census
Accommodation Crisis hits Towns and Villages

Like many other towns and villages in the region, Bethlehem's inns are full and many families travelling to the area for the National Census are finding great difficulty in obtaining accommodation if their families no longer live in the area. Many have had to camp on the outskirts of the village and rely on the good nature of the inhabitants to supply them with food.

The Roman officials have promised to make different arrangements for the next census so that people do not have to travel to their place of birth. Some people have had to travel from as far as Galilee, which has taken many days.

Late News

There was trouble between Roman soldiers and the local people near the Walls of the city in Jerusalem late last night. Two soldiers were hurt and several pieces of army equipment were damaged. Pontius Pilot is to see local leaders tomorrow.
